WHAT IS SPORTING CLAYS?

With its roots coming from England, sporting clays is the closest thing to actual field shooting of all shotgun sports. Rather than having clay birds thrown from standardized distances and angles as with skeet or trap, sporting clays courses are designed to simulate the hunting of ducks, pheasants, other upland birds, and even rabbits. Targets may be thrown from literally any angle or distance to simulate wingshooting, and six different sizes of clay targets are used to further give the shooter the experience of actual hunting conditions.

Sporting clays is typically shot in squads of two to six people and played over a course of 10 to 15 shooting stations laid around fields or around the natural features of the land. The course design is not limited in target speed, angle, or distance, so every course is different.

The most common target used in sporting clays is the clay that is used in skeet and trap. But sporting clays also uses specialty targets to introduce the illusion of speed or distance in the eye of the shooter, moving at speeds or in the ways of game birds. All can be thrown as singles or pairs.

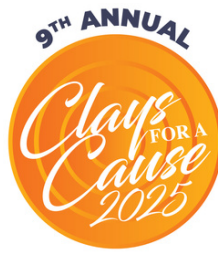

WHAT ARE THE BASIC RULES?

As in golf, the rules of sporting clays become more specific, and therefore more restrictive, as the level of competition increases. There are a few basic rules, however, that define the sport:

1. The shooter may start with a low gun or a pre-mounted gun when calling for the target.
2. Only two shells may be loaded.
3. If doubles are thrown and both are broken with one shot, both are counted as kills.
